

“I wouldn’t be who I am without all that Duke has given me.”

- NENA SANDERSON T’07

Nena Sanderson T’07 is a public policy major, but she’s pursuing many other interests, too. She’s a Chronicle photographer and shoots visiting speakers and sports events. For three years, she helped fourth graders write storybooks at a Durham public school. She’s studied French, Southern history, and Latin dance; and she wrote a mentoring manual for a service-learning course on women’s leadership.

Affording Opportunity
DUKE’S FINANCIAL AID INITIATIVE

The daughter of two Raleigh teachers, Nena knew she’d need help paying for college, but she never dreamed Duke would be an option. Financial aid made it possible – “and I’m amazed by all the extra things Duke pays for, too.” Her aid package enabled Nena to study abroad in Paris, intern in Washington, D.C., and complete a summer research project in Durham. “I’m getting so much more than a book education at Duke.”
